Many times over the course of history, Buddhist traditions have been adopted by converts who have interpreted it in new and distinctive ways, or else brought to new lands by people who have carried it with them from their homeland as a way of preserving their cultural heritage. How does the challenge of translating old forms into a new culture necessitate compromises of architectural style or ritual use? From World War I to the close of the Cold War, from the advent of the movies to the electronic promiscuities of the Web, the unities of the modern world have dissolved into the multiplicities of postmodernity. The ways that art has intersected with the momentous shifts in life will be considered. In the utopian dreams of Constructivism, philosophical reveries of Cubism, subversions of Dada, and introspections of Surrealism and Expressionism, and in the low-brow allusion of pop art, unbound edness of performance art, and media-mimicking interventions of the 1990s, artists have probed the meaning of human experience and action in the 20th and 21st centuries.

Students will learn to analyze art and architecture based on firsthand experience, field surveys, and faculty-guided research. Units: 3
Repeatability: No

This seminar examines representations of space, built environments and psychological landscapes in cinema. From the perspectives of both architecture and film studies, the course explores how film renders physical space on a two-dimensional screen by aesthetic and technical means to convey our fears and desires. So, too, artists have similarly tackled the layered spaces of the screen in moving image artworks that probe at the porous boundaries between virtual and real space. Reading discussions, screenings and project critiques delineate the architectural framing of space and time within a cinematic context—and ultimately, question the relationship between cinema, architecture, perception and the body.
